

with the bases loaded and none out, he didn't let a man get across.

But Hartzell was the little trouble maker, grabbing off one-third of the Yank hits, starting the rally that tied up the score in the fourth and driving in the winning run in the twelfth.

Intimating to a South Sider today that Frank Chance's band of Yanks are ready for the grave will be indignantly denied, after the exhibition by said Chance and Yanks at Comiskey's park last week and Sunday.

Has Frank Chance made good? Ask the fans. It isn't what the Yanks do this year that will decide whether the "Peerless Leader" is worth $25,000 a year, but what he does with the outfit in 1914, and appearances indicate that "Husk" is going to do something.

The scouts have raked the bushes so thoroughly that in some minor leagues the managers find it hard to play out the schedules.

Now that Comiskey has spoken his little piece, some of the people who were trying to shoo Jimmy Callahan off the map will have to revamp their chatter.
